revchill

We're small. That is precisely the offer.

Partnership dossier 2027. Inside you'll find the real numbers, where every euro goes and what it costs to be there. Nothing inflated: if what you're after is mass reach, we'll tell you up front and save you the meeting.

PRIVATE DOCUMENT 2027 SEASON NOVEMBER 2026 REVCHILL.CO

WHAT THIS IS

Revenue management afterworks, with no talks and no stands.

RevChill started from a simple idea: the best insights in this industry don't happen in the plenary room, they happen over a drink afterwards. So we got rid of the room. These are evening meet-ups, free to attend and capped in size, on rooftops and in bars across five cities. No panel, no printed agenda and nobody trying to sell you anything.

Nine meet-ups, five cities and thirteen brands that have already been through them. In 2027 we're turning it into a proper season, and adding a long-form format that doesn't exist anywhere else in this industry: the RevChill Weekend.

Málaga, April 2026. La terraza de San Juan, at Hotel Málaga Premium.

WHAT IT IS

- Forty professionals on their feet, beer in hand, talking about pricing.
- Free entry for whoever comes, always.
- Three brands per meet-up maximum, never two from the same niche.
- Every piece of material produced that night, yours to use wherever you want.

WHAT IT ISN'T

- A conference. There's no stage and no programme.
- A trade fair. No booth and no aisle for people to walk past: your brand sits inside the conversation, not next to it.
- A database. Attendee lists are never sold or shared.
- A channel with mass reach. That one deserves the next page.

Roll-ups, yes. Your brand can be there in the room with its own stand-up banner. What there isn't is a separate space for people to walk past.

This is what a brand looks like at a RevChill. Present, visible and interrupting nobody. Pictured: Turneo in Málaga.

Seville. The rooftop where all of this started, with the Giralda behind.

THE NUMBERS, UNRETOUCHED

These are the real figures. They are small.

We'd rather you saw them here than found them out later. Everything on the pages that follow rests on this, and on nothing else.

700	150	~1,000	~40
followers on LinkedIn	across the WhatsApp communities	impressions per post	attendees per meet-up

If you want reach, there are better places

We'll say it plainly: put one meet-up's budget into LinkedIn advertising and you'll reach far more people than everything RevChill publishes in a quarter. If impressions are your goal this year, close this dossier and spend it there. No hard feelings.

What that budget doesn't buy you anywhere else is two hours on your feet, beer in hand, talking unhurriedly with forty people who are overwhelmingly revenue managers. People who decide, or advise whoever decides, which tool gets bought next year. That conversation doesn't come with impressions. It comes with names.

A meet-up costs €1,000

That's €25 for each person who walks through the door, and the vast majority of them are exactly your audience.

A booth at an industry fair

Costs several times that, and most of the people walking past aren't your customer and never will be.

The figures above are from November 2026 and are refreshed in every version of this dossier. If they've moved by the time you read this, ask us for the latest one.

WHO COMES

Revenue managers, mostly. Senior and junior at the same table.

The profiles vary —there's hotel management, distribution, consulting, product and students— but the core is clear and consistent: revenue people. Having seniors and juniors in the same room is part of why the conversation works: some ask the question nobody dares ask inside their own company, and others answer without the plenary-room posture.

Madrid, November 2025. Terraza Martini, at the Radisson RED.

WHERE THE COMMUNITY IS

Seville — home base. It's where the organiser lives and where most meet-ups happen.

Madrid — the big one. It lines up with the industry's trade fairs.

Barcelona — active since 2026.

Málaga — active since 2026.

Levante — Valencia and Benidorm, growing.

WHY THE SIZE MATTERS

Forty is the number at which you can still talk to anyone you want. Past a hundred and fifty, closed huddles form and you end the night having spoken to three people — the same three you already talked to.

At the Weekend we drop to fifteen or twenty on purpose, and there you don't talk to everyone: you live with everyone.

THE TWO FORMATS

One puts you in the conversation. The other puts you in the group.

This is the difference that explains everything else, including the price gap. Both gather the same kind of person, but the relationship you build in each is nothing alike.

	REVCHILL AFTERWORK	REVCHILL WEEKEND
How long it lasts	Two or three hours	Forty-eight
How many people	Around 40, open to whoever comes	15 to 20, hand-picked
Where	A city rooftop	A house out in the countryside
Your team	Attends for the evening	Lives there the whole weekend
Real contact time	Minutes per person	Hours per person
What you're actually buying	Presence	Access
Brands at the same event	Up to 3	Up to 3
What content comes out	Photos and a short video	Photos, long-form video and interviews
How many per year	10 to 12	1 pilot, and up to 4 or 5 if it works
Indicative contribution	€1,000 – €1,200 split between 1 and 3 brands	€3,000 – €3,500 split between 1 and 3 brands

The three-brand rule is the same in both and isn't up for negotiation. An event with eight logos stops being a meet-up and becomes a small trade fair, and at that point it's no longer worth what it's worth.

REVCHILL AFTERWORK

Where a meet-up's money actually goes.

This isn't margin. The venue is nearly always free, because we have arrangements with hotels and spaces that want a rooftop filled on a weeknight. What a partner contributes goes into two things: making sure there's something to eat and drink, and making sure usable material comes out of the night.

ITEM	COST	NOTE
Venue	€0	Provided by the host venue. It's the piece that makes everything else add up.
Food and drink	€600 – €750	Finger food for everyone and the first round. The biggest line, and the one people notice most.

ITEM	COST	NOTE
Photography and video	€250 – €300	A photo report of the night and a short video. This is the part you then use.
Materials and merchandise	€80 – €120	Name badges, small touches, whatever the night needs.
Contingency	€70	There's always something.
Total	€1,000 – €1,200	What we aim to raise per meet-up, whether it comes from one brand or three.

Three ways to be there

The same meet-up, split three ways. The fewer brands there are, the more room you take up.

THREE BRANDS

Shared

Up to 3 brands, from different niches

€400

per brand, per meet-up

The cheapest way in. Your logo, your presence and the night's material, sharing the bill with two other brands that don't compete with you.

TWO BRANDS

Shared with one

Only 2 brands in the room

€600

per brand, per meet-up

The sweet spot. You're still sharing, but with only one other brand, and you get your five minutes without the night looking like a parade of logos.

ONE BRAND

Exclusive

You're the only brand of the night

€1,000

the whole meet-up

Your logo alone, your five minutes alone and all of the night's material tied to your brand only. It's the format attendees remember most.

You pay less per brand when you share, and more in total when there are several of you: each added brand means more coordination and less room for the others. What never changes is the cap of three.

What's included, whichever way you come in Five minutes to introduce yourself — standing up, drink in hand, no projector. It's the only moment of the night when a brand speaks.

Your logo on the website — on the company wall on the home page and on the partnership page, linked to your site, permanently.

A mention in the meet-up's posts — before, during and after, on LinkedIn and in the WhatsApp communities.

All of the night's material — photos and a short video, yours to use, with no expiry.

Two invitations for your team — on top of whoever presents.

A report on the night — how many people came and what profiles were there. Plus the contact details of anyone who agreed to share them with you.

Barcelona, May 2026. This is what you're buying: people from your industry talking, unhurried.

SEVERAL MEET-UPS

What we're really after is closing the season with you.

A single meet-up is fine. Several locked in advance are another thing entirely: they let us block dates and venues months ahead, announce earlier and organise better. And they give you continuity, which is what makes people associate your brand with this rather than remember you as the brand from that one night.

Barcelona, May 2026. The Yurbban Passage rooftop.

There's no volume discount, and it's worth saying why: every night costs what it costs and the budget is measured to the euro. Cutting the per-meet-up price would mean cutting the food or the photo report, and at that point what you're buying isn't the same thing any more. What does change when you commit to several is what you get to choose.

3 meet-ups

YOU PICK THE CITY

You choose the cities, before anyone else. Repeat one or spread out.

6 meet-ups

YOU PICK THE DATES

Half a season, with your dates chosen before they're published.

Three commitments and what they cost

A tech company testing the water, sharing the bill

3 shared meet-ups	€400 × 3

€1,200

Three cities, three nights, three photo reports.

6 meet-ups with two brands	€600 × 6

REVCHILL WEEKEND · NEW FOR 2027

Forty-eight hours with fifteen people chosen one by one.

This is the bet of the year and it's a format that doesn't exist in this industry. A house out in nature, one weekend, and between fifteen and twenty people selected from the applicants with one goal: that the group works. A mix of profiles, of property types and of seniority.

The first edition is a pilot, and it happens in Andalusia. If it goes well —and above all if it proves useful to the brands that back it— the intention is to take it to another four or five locations across 2027. Whoever comes into the pilot comes into the edition that decides whether the rest exist.

WHY THE WELCOME PACK MATTERS

It's the piece that turns a private weekend into content. People photograph what they're wearing and what they take home. A good t-shirt, a wristband, something that doesn't go in the bin: that circulates on social media for weeks, and they post it, not us. And it's what creates the FOMO for the next edition, which is the real asset being built here.

There'll be the outdoors. Sierra trails in the morning. You talk while you walk, which is when the good stuff comes out.

There'll be learning. No talks and no printed agenda: whatever each of us knows, told out on the porch.

There'll be a long table. Dinner cooked over coals, and the talk that comes after. Nobody heads up to their room at eleven.

These three images are a recreation: the Weekend hasn't happened yet. The afterwork photographs elsewhere in this dossier are real.

REVCHILL WEEKEND · WHERE THE MONEY GOES

What sponsorship actually pays for.

Attendees pay a ticket, and for a full weekend with accommodation and meals included it doesn't come close to covering half of what it costs. That gap is, quite literally, what sponsorship covers. Without it the ticket would double, and at that point the group would be selected by wallet rather than by profile — the exact opposite of what we want.

WHAT IT'S SPENT ON

- The house. Rented in full for the whole weekend. It's the biggest line and it's fixed: it doesn't drop if fewer people come.
- The meals. Welcome dinner, two breakfasts, one lunch out coming down from the hike, the Saturday barbecue and whatever gets carried up the hill.
- The content creator. Spends the whole weekend with the group, expenses covered.
- The welcome pack. RevChill and brand merchandise, designed not to end up in a drawer.
- A contingency buffer. For a first edition it should be generous: there's no previous year to go on.

WHAT THAT ACTUALLY BUYS

Keeping the ticket affordable is what lets us pick the fifteen or twenty attendees on merit rather than on who can afford it. It's the piece that makes the group worth being part of, and it's the first thing your brand is paying for.

The second is the content. Without someone documenting the weekend, this is a private getaway nobody hears about. With them, it's the asset that sells the editions that follow — and your brand is in it.

The third is the keepsake: what people wear and photograph for weeks afterwards.

The hike costs nothing beyond snacks. Travel to the house is on each person, attendees and brands alike: it's the one thing nobody covers. The line-by-line budget is something we walk you through in conversation; here we'd rather not fill a page with figures.

Three ways into the Weekend

THREE BRANDS

Shared

Up to 3 brands, from different niches

€1,150

per brand

A place for your representative and presence in the welcome pack. The most accessible way into the format.

TWO BRANDS

Shared with one

Only 2 brands in the house

€1,700

per brand

A place for your representative, real weight in the welcome pack and the option to bring an activity of your own if it fits the group.

ONE BRAND

Exclusive

You're the only brand of the weekend

€3,000

the whole Weekend

The entire first edition tied to your brand, with the full photo report and documentary video going out under your name. There's only one.

Each brand brings one representative at most, and their place is included: they sleep, eat and walk with the group. That's why three brands contribute a little more in total than one does — every added representative is another person to house and feed for two days.

REVCHILL WEEKEND · WHAT YOU'RE BUYING

Your salesperson stops being a salesperson for two days.

This is the whole reason the format exists, and the reason it costs three times what an afterwork does. At an evening meet-up your team talks to each person for a few minutes and leaves. Here they have breakfast with them, climb a hill with them and have dinner with them two nights running.

What gets built in those forty-eight hours isn't a lead. It's a relationship that isn't entirely professional any more, with people who either are your customers or could be. Anyone who has sold into this industry knows what that's worth and how hard it is to buy.

WHAT YOU GET

- A place for your representative, everything covered except travel.
- Presence in the welcome pack: your product, your merchandise or both.
- Photo report, long-form video and interviews, yours to use.
- A mention across all Weekend communications, before and after.
- The option to propose an activity or workshop, if it fits and isn't a sales pitch in disguise.
- First refusal on the later 2027 editions, before they're offered elsewhere. If the pilot works there'll be four or five more, in other regions.

WHAT WE ASK OF YOU

- That your representative comes to join in, not to work the room.
- That there's no sales presentation. No projector, no pitch, no brochure in the bedroom.
- That you understand this is a first edition and something will go differently than planned.
- That you decide early: the welcome pack and the house have to be locked months ahead.

IN-KIND CONTRIBUTIONS

It doesn't all have to be money.

We're mainly looking for companies from the hotel sector, usually tech, because that's what the community does. But it isn't a requirement: if you think your product or service fits a gathering of industry professionals, let's talk. Several of the collaborations that worked best weren't a bank transfer.

WHAT WE ACCEPT

Physical product — drinks, samples, anything that can be handed out or put in the welcome pack.

Merchandise — t-shirts, wristbands, backpacks. At the Weekend this is worth its weight in gold.

The venue — if you have a hotel, a rooftop or a house that fits, that's the most valuable contribution there is.

Services — photography, video, transport, catering.

HOW IT'S VALUED

What you contribute is valued at what it saves us, not at your list price. Give us a hundred t-shirts that cost you €600 and they count as €600, because that's what we were going to spend. It's the only way the books still balance at the end of the year.

That's why licences and discount codes don't replace a contribution: they don't pay for dinner or for the photographer. They're very welcome as an extra inside the welcome pack, and as an extra they're genuinely appreciated.

BESPOKE

If you can think of a better way to be seen, we're listening.

Everything you've read so far is what we know how to do, not a closed menu. We're a small operation, and that has one concrete advantage: we can put together something that isn't in this document without asking anyone's permission or waiting on anyone's marketing committee.

A format that doesn't exist yet — a themed meet-up, a small roundtable, something at a trade fair. If it makes sense for the community, we'll do it.

Joint content — a series of posts, a video, a recorded conversation with someone from your team. This is, in fact, where we want to grow.

Presence in the material, not just the logo — your brand appearing inside what gets told, rather than stuck in a corner of it.

A deal that mixes formats — afterworks and the Weekend in the same agreement, with the numbers worked out to fit.

Whatever you come up with — genuinely. Bring it and we'll look at it.

THE LIMITS

What we don't sell, however hard we're asked.

This is here because it's what protects the value of everything else. The day we sell the attendee list, people stop coming — and then there's nothing left to sponsor.

Details from anyone who didn't give them

We do share the contact details of attendees who agree at registration, by ticking a box that names your company. From anyone who doesn't tick it you get nothing, and that box is never pre-ticked.

Early access to registrations

Nobody knows who's coming before the night starts. Not you either.

More than three brands per event

Not at the afterworks and not at the Weekend. And never two from the same niche or talking to the same buyer.

The microphone

Five minutes to introduce yourself at an afterwork, none at the Weekend. Nobody comes to have a product presented to them.

Control over the content

You review what concerns you before it's published, but the community doesn't get edited to make a brand look better.

Category exclusivity in perpetuity

It can be agreed for a season. Forever, no: it would shut the door on half the industry.

WHERE THIS IS GOING

Coming in now costs what it costs now.

The figures at the start are small, but the direction is clear. The 2027 plan isn't to fill bigger rooms: it's for the content to be closer and more personal, to show the people rather than the logo, and for brands to carry more weight inside what gets told without this stopping to feel like RevChill.

WHERE WE ARE

700 — followers on LinkedIn

150 — across the WhatsApp communities

9 — meet-ups held

0 — Weekend editions. The first one is the pilot.

WHERE WE'RE GOING IN 2027

10 to 12 — meet-ups, two per major city

Up to 5 — Weekends: the Andalusian pilot and four more if it lands

Portugal — under consideration for the end of the season

More video — that's where the growth is

Whoever comes in during 2027 does so at the prices from when we were small, and with the treatment given to whoever arrives first: picking cities before anyone else, shaping the format with us, and renewing before it's offered outside. For founding partners we freeze the price for 2028, however much this grows.

Revenue tech companies, hotel groups, consultancies and the venues that opened their doors to us. No two from the same niche on the same night.

Half an hour of conversation is enough to know whether this makes sense.

You don't have to decide anything over email. Tell me what you do and what you'd expect to get out of this, and I'll tell you frankly whether I think you fit. If you don't, I'll say so: it's cheaper for both of us than finding out after the first meet-up.
